

Figure 3: Snares C study plot in April 1997, four months after excavation, showing the 22 burrow entrances which were established as "starter" tunnels on 21 January 1997, as well as 57 new burrow entrances dug by titi after that date. Map not drawn to scale.

Photograph 1: Titi burrow entrances under Olearia lyallii canopy in an undisturbed area of The Snares, December 1996.

Photograph 2: Excavation of titi burrows to uncover nests in the Snares C study plot on 10 December 1996.

Photograph 3: Snares C study plot on 16 January 1997 just prior to the filling-in of excavation holes and after one month of weathering. Aluminium stakes mark titi nest sites. (Photograph courtesy of J von Tunzelman, Depa Conservation, Te Anna)

Photograph 4: Snares C study plot after excavation holes had been filled-in, 21 January 1997. The burrow entrances visible (marked with aluminium stakes) are the "starter" tunnels established on one side (Side A) of the study plot.

